The property was no doubt a sacred and ceremonial site. Mounds and fortifications were recorded in early Wisconsin archeological books. One day while out plowing, Herman's (Johann's son) horses dropped through a mound...and what he found was...Come to the museum and get the rest of the story! As of 2008, Henschels are in the process of rebuilding this mound. In 1996, through an excavation by the University of Marquette, Henschels is the official location of "Wisconsin's OLDEST Red Ochre Burial Site", (600 to 800 BC).

When you drive over the hill and see the Sheboygan Marsh (once a glacial lake) below...you will see why you will soon be stepping foot onto sacred ground. The view alone is worth the trip.
